Dear Readers,

Hello to the monsoon showers! Hope everyone is doing great.

The summer wedding season was in full bloom this year. We have introduced an amazing range of wedding collections for both bride and groom.

Grooms are giving a tough competition to brides these days with their jewellery choices. We have curated some wonderful pieces for them in our wedding collection. Do check them out in our social media handles.

It was really nice meeting many new clients at Styletatva exhibition conducted by FICCI flo Hyderabad. A wide range of fine handcrafted temple and diamond jewellery on the display attracted the crowd. Jadau necklaces were the showstoppers of the show.

THE BYGONE ERA

THE ROYAL ERA OF CROWNS

The Crown Jewels are the most resplendent and famous of the nation's treasures. Kept under the watchful eye of the Yeoman Warders at the Tower of London, they constitute the most complete collection of royal regalia in the world. Their long history, spanning almost a thousand years, and their continued ceremonial use in the Coronation Service and at the State Opening of Parliament make them one of the richest expressions of sovereign magnificence. The Crown Jewels comprise a host of extraordinary items – from orbs, sceptres and crowns, to gold and silver-gilt banqueting and altar plate. All are intimately connected with the status and role of the monarch.

For the British royals, jewellery is no mere adornment. From the stones to the settings, everything has significance–be it a political power play, a family heirloom or a national treasure. The house of British consists of many wonderful Tiaras and each one of them has a history to it.

Fig-02

This tiara was worn by Laura Lopes, the daughter of Camilla, Duchess of Cornwall, for her wedding in 2006. Camilla also wore it for her first wedding to Andrew Parker-Bowles, and has been pictured in it as recently as 2015.

The Cubitt-Shand Tiara

The Cubitt Tiara belonged to Camilla's grandmother, Sonia Keppel, who has her own set of links to the Windsors. Sonia was married to the Hon. Roland Cubitt — hence the name of this diamond floral tiara.The design is formed of flowers and sprays of leaves, which rises to a central point in a slightly asymmetrical style.

Made completely of diamonds, this piece features flower designs nestled in a thick wreath of leaves. It is likely to have also been worn as a necklace originally, as the tell-tale centre apex implies.

Diamonds are made of a single element—they are nearly 100% carbon. Under the extreme heat and pressure far below the earth's surface, the carbon atoms bond in a unique way that results in diamonds' beautiful and rare crystalline structure.
